

Hello, my name is Jean Dorvillier and I just recently started leaning about networks and cyber operations the beginning of this year. It was after my first I took my first computer science class in college that I realized my life long dream of being somewhat of an all trade craftsman in IT. I decided to start my path as a security researcher in a way to learn different areas in internet security that relates to other trades like coding and web development or data science.

At the moment in my studies I am focused on networking, and command prompt scripting, I am also taking some time off school due to living conditions in hopes to return again to study quantum physics and quantum computing and well as the hardware involved in quantum computing systems. Im hoping that working for you will provide me with some foundational knowledge that will keep me moving forward completing my goal in the future.
